Chairs

Mary Lopez is Associate Professor of Economics at Occidental College. Her research spans across three main areas: immigration, entrepreneurship, and poverty. In particular, she tries to understand how gender, U.S. immigration policy, and antipoverty policies shape labor market experiences.

John Skrentny is the Co-Director of the Center of Comparative Immigration Studies and Professor of Sociology at UCSD. His primary research areas are law, politics and public policy as they relate to equal opportunities, immigration, and the science and engineering workforce.

Tom Wong is Assistant Professor of Political Science at UCSD. His research focuses on the politics of immigration, citizenship and migrant illegality. His work also explores the links between immigration, race and ethnicity, and the politics of identity.

Rocio Rosales is a Chancellor's Postdoctoral Fellow in the Center for Comparative Immigration Studies at UCSD. Her research interests include international migration, immigrant and ethnic economies, race and ethnicity, law and society, and Latinas/os in the U.S.

Marisa A. Abrajano is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of California, San Diego. Her research focuses on campaigns and elections, political behavior, Latino politics, and race and politics in the United States.
