THE NEW IMMIGRATION FEDERALISM

U.S. immigration laws have recently undergone a dramatic shift toward promoting integration. How are we to make sense of this new immigration federalism? What are its causes? And what are its consequences for the federal-state balance of power? In The New Immigration Federalism, Professor S. Karthick Ramakrishnan provides answers to these questions using a mix of quantitative, historical, and doctrinal legal analysis. Ramakrishnan refutes the popular “demographic necessity” argument put forward by anti-immigrant activists and politicians. He instead posits that immigration federalism is rooted in a political process that connects both federal and sub-federal actors: the Polarized Change Model. The model captures not only the spread of restrictionist legislation but also its abrupt turnaround in 2012, projecting valuable insights for the future.

Karthick Ramakrishnan is Associate Dean and Professor at the UC Riverside School of Public Policy and adjunct fellow at the Public Policy Institute of California. His research addresses civic participation, immigration policy, and the politics of race and ethnicity. He has authored or co-authored articles, reports, and books, including Asian American Political Participation: Emerging Constituents and Their Political Identities. He directs the National Asian American Survey and is founder of the University of California AAPI Policy Multicampus Research Program. Ramakrishnan is also the founding editor of the Journal of Race, Ethnicity, and Politics. He holds a Ph.D. from Princeton University.
